Why Working New Yorkers Still Can't Afford A Congestion Tax Or Tolls

With Median income holding steady or declining (when most would hope to see an increase) and more than ever out of work, Sunday's New York Post focus on the predominant jobs in each borough and employment makes plain: Imposing a congestion tax that limits access to Manhattan still unfairly burdens working New Yorkers who can least afford it!

If you can make it here, you can make it anywhere — as a waiter.

Restaurants are the top employers in Manhattan, with 84,653 table-slingers catering to diners in the $2.3 billion industry, according to surprising findings by the US Census that show how New York works.

Colleges, lawyers offices, investment services and hotels ranked in the top 10 Manhattan industries, according to the County Business Patterns survey, which measures private-sector employment and does not include public workers like teachers, police, firefighters and government.
